4000 BUSHELS PEACHES ARE RUINED BY STORM

'LATE CRAWFORDS' SAFE

Fruit Destroyed Was Ripe and Ready to Be Picked on Saturday—Refrigerator Cars Were Iced for Use on Monday—Complete Loss.

Four thousand bushels of luscious peaches were destroyed by the heavy rain of Saturday, last, at the orchards of Col. W. Fred Reynolds, near Bellefonte. The peaches were ripe and were to have been picked for shipment on Monday.

The firm of Lauderbach-Barber Company had purchased the entire output of the Reynolds orchards and were engaged in shipping the fruit from Bellefonte when Saturday's rain storm brought shipments to a sudden stop. The firm will be unable to resume shipping peaches from Bellefonte for about two weeks, when the late Crawford brand of fruit will be ripe and ready for the market.

Col. Reynolds is the loser as a result of Saturday's storm. While Lauderbach-Barber Company take the entire output of the orchards, Col. Reynolds attends to the picking, packing and shipping of the peaches to Bellefonte.

Some of the trees in the Reynolds orchards yield from five to seven bushels. The peaches were of especially fine quality and large and heavy. As the rain of Saturday continued the peaches became water soaked and by thousands, dropped to the ground. The weight of the ripened fruit caused the peaches to crush as they struck the ground, making the loss complete.

Lauderbach-Barber Company shipped several carloads of peaches from the Reynolds orchards last week. The firm had several additional refrigerator cars on hand here and these were being iced and ready to receive fruit on Monday. One car was [illegible] on Friday night. This was the last fruit to leave the orchards, Saturday's rain first stopping work there and then causing the damage, as stated.

The crop of late Crawfords, not yet ripened, escaped damage; in fact they were benefited by the rain.

HOWARD BRICK REJECTED

Allegheny Street to be Paved With Watsontown Product.

Brick from the Howard brick works will not be used in the paving of Allegheny Street, from Parrish's drug store to Bishop Street. Beveled edged brick from Watsontown will be used. The color will be red, although many persons were hopeful that yellow or a light brown type would be selected.

Chief Engineer Bosler, of the State Highway Department, last week met the County Commissioners and members of the Street Committee of Council and arranged for the change in the brick. Mr. Bosler said that the sample of brick sent from the Howard plant stood the test very well but that evidently some slight mistake had been made in the burning.

It has been decided that Allegheny Street shall be paved to a width of 48 feet from Parrish's drug store to Bishop Street. In some parts of the street this represents the present width. The plan is to make the street of a uniform width. To do this the sidewalks at some points will be widened.

A petition is in circulation to have the proposed State road on Bishop Street built to a width of 24 feet. At the regular meeting of Borough Council, on Monday evening, it was suggested that a stopcock be placed inside the uniform curbing in front of each residence along the State road. The purpose of this is to lessen the danger of tearing up the State road to make repairs to water pipes.

It was reported to Council that the watch box, near Reuben Miller's store, had been moved to the opposite side of the railroad tracks. In its old position the box interfered with traffic.

WOMEN TURN HOSE ON MAN REPAIRING ROOF

GOT A GOOD DUCKING

Misses Ammerman, of Bishop Street, Resented His Doing Work on Building Which is in Litigation—Spectators Enjoyed Skirmish.

A lively stream of water, played on him from a garden hose in the hands of Misses Mary and Nancy Ammerman, failed to prevent Roy Hull from following out instructions to repair a roof on a small building in the rear of the Ammerman property, on Bishop Street, last week. Hull is a tinner for Harvey Miller. It was while doing some work for the latter that he came in for the "ducking." There wasn't any accident about it. The Misses Ammerman didn't want him to touch the building, in question. Hull said that he was there to obey orders. The next instant he was drenched with a stream from the garden hose in the hands of the irate women. Hull disappeared and for a time it was thought that he had given up the battle. To the amusement of a large crowd assembled in Bishop Street to witness the skirmish, Hull returned, clad in a rubber coat, and apparently unmindful of the water as it poured on his back, calmly proceeded to finish repairing the roof.

The small building which figured in the skirmish also figures in some litigation which is scheduled to be in court at the next regular session. The building, it seems, is on the property of the Reynolds estate, adjoining the Ammerman property. The eaves of the roof of the building extend over the Ammerman property. Harvey Miller stores his charcoal in the small building and when he found that it was being damaged by last [illegible] orders [illegible] the roof. First he communicated with George R. Meek, agent for the Reynolds property, who directed that the roof be repaired. Hull then preceeded to the roof of the building—also to his informal bath.

The Misses Ammerman contended that the property was in litigation and therefore no one had any right to touch it. Not being a student of Blackstone, Hull didn't allow this interpretation of the law to disturb him. He said that all he knew about it was that he was there to repair the roof. With that he went to work. Meanwhile the Misses Ammerman got busy. Aiming a garden hose toward Hull, they turned on the water and the stream struck him midway between his heels and his head. The crowd in Bishop Street let loose a merry yell. Hull gasped, for the water was cold and he realized that he was just starting on the job. When he had been soaked to the skin he concluded that Harvey Miller's rubber coat might come in handy and he beat a temporary retreat. When he returned he was wearing the coat. As soon as he reappeared on the roof, the Misses Ammerman again turned the hose on him. The crowd in the street again cheered. Refusing to be conquered, Hull bravely stuck to the job until he had the roof repaired.

TENANT LEAVES FARM

William Curry Quits After Dispute With Dempster Meek.

Because of a dispute which he recently had with Dempster Meek, William Curry on Monday of last week walked away from the Meek farm, at Waddles. Curry was the tenant farmer, operating it on a half-share basis all around.

Just what caused the dispute is not known. Mr. Meek had been ill shortly before the trouble. Curry disappeared, leaving the farm with the corn in the fields and the seeding still to be attended to. He has a sister residing at Jersey Shore and on Tuesday his daughter, Mrs. James Bailey, of Bellefonte, went to that place with the hope of finding him. She learned that he had been there, but that he had afterward gone away. To persons at Jersey Shore Curry stated that he expected to return to that place and take a position operating a stationary engine. Yesterday, however, Curry telegraphed to friends that he would return to the farm today.

Democrats Fill Vacancy.

Thomas H. Greevy, of Blair County, has been named by the Democrats to succeed Samuel B. Price, of Lackawanna County, who declined the nomination for Lieutenant Governor. The vacancy was filled at a meeting of the Democratic State Committee, at Harrisburg, on Tuesday.

A YOUNG MAN'S FIRST VOTE

The young man who, in November, next, will cast his first vote, should stop and consider that step and how it may influence his entire future. It will be the most important vote he will ever cast at the polls.

A glance backward reveals the wayside strewn with men who thought they were larger than any party. If the truth could be learned in each individual case it would be disclosed that for the most part they were men who failed to start right when they found themselves face to face with the duty of casting their first vote.

In almost every campaign there may be found certain men who style themselves "independents." They belong to no party. From year to year they change their title but each year they practice the same schemes. This year they call themselves the "Keystone Party." Four years ago they called themselves the "Lincoln Party." Next year it will be another title. The only thing new, however, will be the title. Scratch the surface and you will find the same set of men who have been plotting year in and year out to secure—what?

AN OFFICE.

When it is all said and done it will be found that the men who plan and finance ninety-nine per cent of the so-called "independent" or "reform" movements are so engaged either because they are seeking office or have some axe to grind. And for the most part they are men who at one time or another have been the recipients of honors at the hands of the Republican or Democratic party. Invariably they attempted to become greater than their party only when they realized that further honors or rewards were not to be had.

The young man who is about to cast his first vote is usually sought out by those men who have left their party. Without a following the latter mean nothing and soon would disappear. They depend on such support as they may receive from men who mean well but who allow themselves to be misled.

There are in Centre County many young men who in November will cast their first vote. There is every reason why they should start right by voting the Republican ticket. By so doing they will help elect John K. Tener to the high office of Governor. He, too, is a young man. Clean, upright and a Republican through and through, he is the type that appeals to the young man. His administration will reflect credit on not only himself and the Republican party but on every young man who helped elect him.

The Republican party believes in young men. It welcomes them to its ranks. It honors those who are able and worthy and loyal.

Loyalty to party is of vital importance to every young man. At first thought, it seems to some such a simple and harmless thing to cut their ticket. They may do so to humor or please a friend or perhaps to pay off some trifling old score. Once a man starts the practice of cutting his ticket he soon reaches the point where his ticket belongs to everybody, in fact, but himself. He didn't intend that he should be disloyal to his party but the net result is the same.

[illegible] makes it a rule never to cut his ticket wins out in the end. The man who is with his party in the hour of success and deserts it in the night of storm will, sooner or later, fall by the wayside. His party will survive and move onward, while he will never be able to recover the lost ground. Having deserted his party in time of need he thereby sacrifices all claim for future reward.

Loyalty to a cause, no matter what it may be, is always the best policy. It is the only manly course to pursue. Loyalty to one's chosen party brings its reward. A few may applaud disloyalty, but by the great majority it is despised. The Republican party rewards its loyal sons. It has no honors for those who run when the party is under fire.

Regularity is but another term for party loyalty. It may be that occasionally some candidate on the ticket is not to the liking of a voter. At the same time, the loyal party man will not allow a personal dislike to prompt him to cut his ticket. In the long run the party nominees will be found worthy of support.

We all make mistakes—that is, unless we stand still and achieve nothing. A party that aims to achieve progress will make some missteps. The Republican party stands for progress. In the march forward it has made and will continue to make mistakes. But the Republican party is big and broad enough to correct its mistakes and meanwhile move onward. The party that is without flaw is the party that stands still. Such a party is a pretty poor refuge for the young man who believes it to be his duty to take some part in the affairs of government.

The Republican party offers to ambitious young men a stepping stone to advancement and honors in keeping with his ability. Its a pretty good party for any young man about to cast his first vote to tie to.

DEMOCRATS NAME STEWART

Chosen to Succeed Dimeling as Nominee for State Senator.

Dr. S. E. Stewart, of Clearfield, was last night nominated to succeed George M. Dimeling, also of that county, as the Democratic candidate for State Senator in the Centre-Clearfield district. The nomination was made at a conference of conferees representing the two counties.

Irvin J. Dreese, of Lemont, D. Paul Fortney and J. C. Harper represented Centre County. They were appointed by County Chairman Kimport, who was authorized to take such action at a meeting of the Democratic County Committee, held in Bellefonte, on Saturday, last. Clearfield County was represented by D. H. Waring, W. A. Hagerty and John F. Read.

Orchard Inspections.

Orchard inspections, under the supervision of the State Division of Zoology, are under way this week and will continue next week in Benner and Spring townships. Owners of orchards are invited to attend and ask any questions regarding their trees which may suggest themselves. The apple crop in some sections of the county looks to be very promising, according to State Inspector T. C. Foster. In Half-Moon township the apple crop is reported to be exceptionally fine.

SKIN GRAFTED ON CHILD

To Hasten Recovery of Little Anna Miller, Automobile Victim.

An operation of skin grafting on 4-years-old Anna Miller, victim of an automobile accident five weeks ago, was performed at the Bellefonte hospital on Tuesday. The operation was deemed necessary to hasten her recovery.

It will be recalled that the child sustained a compound fracture of the left leg when she was run down by G. M. Gamble's automobile. The skin grafting was resorted to as a means of hardening the flesh at the point of the fracture, covering as pace of about 8 inches by 4 inches. The skin used was removed from the child's left thigh, 110 minute drafts of skin being necessary to complete the operation.

Helped Them to Tyrone.

On Tuesday a man and his wife, both apparently about 70 years of age, and strangers in this community, appealed to the County Commissioners for assistance in making their way to Bedford, at which place they said they had friends. The aged couple said they had been aided by the Commissioners of Lycoming County in the journey from Williamsport to Lock Haven, and that the Commissioners of Clinton County had paid their way to Bellefonte. Rather than have the man and woman become local charges, the Commissioners here helped them on their journey as far as Tyrone.

DENIES HE SPAT UPON ROSA SMITH'S NEW DRESS

But, J. J. Auman, of Coburn, Has Both Eyes Blackened.

HAS RIVAL ARRESTED

James Finkel Held For Court By Squire Brown—Admitted That He Punched Auman but Thought He Had Sufficient Provocation.

Rosa Smith, one of Spring Mills fairest young ladies and perhaps the prettiest witness to appear thus far in any proceeding before Squire Henry D. Brown, was responsible recently for a fist fight between J. J. Auman and James Finkel, rivals for her hand. As a result of the fight Auman has two blackened eyes and Finkel has been bound over for court. Finkel, as well as Miss Smith, resides at Spring Mills. Auman lives at Coburn.

According to the story related at a hearing before Squire Brown on Saturday, last, the trouble dates back some weeks and culminated on August 20, when Finkel and Miss Smith were enjoying a walk, at Spring Mills. Happening along the street Auman noticed Miss Smith with his rival, and, so Finkel alleged, became so enraged that he spat upon her freshly ironed white dress. All of which Auman stoutly denied, but nevertheless the two rivals clashed later in the evening and the suit before Squire Brown followed.

Finkel, so he declared, gave Auman a contemptuous look when the latter indulged in the actions attributed to him, and proceeded to finish his walk with Miss Smith, treat her to ice cream and cake and then escort her home. This attended to, Finkel related, he then set out to find Auman, encountering him at the Spring Mills hotel. When asked to explain his action later in the evening, Auman [illegible] this denial and one word led to another until finally the two rivals closed in on each other with a rush. When hostilities were suspended Auman appeared to be pretty badly beaten up. Just how many blows he landed on Finkel was not made known by the latter.

Auman swore out a warrant for Finkel, charging assault and battery. At the hearing before Squire Brown Finkel made no attempt to deny that he had struck his rival. He acknowledged that he was responsible for Auman's pair of blackened eyes, but said that he had sufficient provocation for the assault.

Introduced as "Mr. Berry."

Former County Treasurer John Q. Miles wouldn't be contented ten minutes without playing a joke on somebody. Several days ago he was in town between trains and quite naturally talked politics with pretty nearly everybody he met. Shortly before the afternoon train for Tyrone pulled into the station, John Q. was standing talking with Lawyer Al. Dale, Commissioner John Dunlap and one or two others, when Martin Reese, the Snow Shoe passenger train conductor drifted along. John Q. trained his weather eye on Martin and waited. As Reese walked up to the group, John Q. with his best bow, and nodding his head toward Al. Dale, said:

"Mr. Reese, allow me to introduce you to Mr. William H. Berry."

Conductor Reese was "on" in a second, for who doesn't know Al. Dale? Without so much as the suspicion of a smile he replied:

"Glad to meet you Mr. Berry. Is Miles for you, or isn't he?"

John Q. thoughtfully stroked his felt hat and remarked:

"Well, what do you think of that."

Citizens Bought Town Clock.

It develops that Philipsburg citizens prompted by a spirit of patriotism contributed the necessary money for the purchase, crating, shipping etc., of the old town clock which was some time ago removed from the Court House, at Bellefonte. On learning that the expense was somewhat more than originally estimated, the citizens held a meeting and made up the difference. This is the brand of public spirit which helps any town. The Philipsburg men who put up the money were E. C. Beezer, H. H. Ashman, T. G. McCausland, W. M. Melick, Cal. Jones, W. B. Brown Charles McCausland, L. B. Gernon, Orin Vail, H. C. Scoot, Roy Rowles, James Black L. W. Nuttall, H. D. Rumberger, P. E. Womelsdorff, A. Y. Casanova,, Dr. F. K. White, S. H. Wigton, C. H. Rowland, James Passmore, A. Y. Casanova, Jr., J. E. Horn, Joseph Pritchard, Jas. F. Kephart, C. V. L. Diener, Ross Wynn, Frank McClure, W. J. Rapsey, Frank Humphrey, George Stott, John Labach, John Dusmore, H. W. Waple, G. M. Kellock, J. C. DESERTS FAMILY; MUST PAY HALF HIS INCOME

H. J. Beck, of Philipsburg, Ordered to Turn Over $40 a Month.

IS SCORED BY COURT

"Promises Do Not Feed and Clothe Children," Says Jndge Orvis in Imposing Sentence—Four Little Children Must Be Supported.

Because he deserted his wife and four little children and then failed to support them, Harry J. Beck, of Philipsburg, was roundly scored in an opinion and decree handed down this week by Judge Orvis. Beck, whose monthly salary is $75 a month, is ordered to pay at least $40 to his wife and children.

According to Judge Orvis' opinion, Beck and his counsel, volunteered in court to support his family. "But offers do not feed and clothe children", remarks Judge Orvis and Beck is directed to furnish $500 bond for faithful compliance with his sentence. Disposing of the case, Judge Orvis handed down the following:

"The evidence in this hearing establishes clearly the liability of the defendant to his wife for the maintenance of herself and particularly of the four children. From whatever viewpoint you may regard the testimony, the admission of the husband and father as to the facts establishes beyond any quibble his duty to support his four children. We cannot understand why he has not voluntarily done so. Both he and his counsel in court offered to do so, but offers do not feed and clothe children.

"According to the defendant's statement he is receiving a salary equivalent to $75 a month. While his earning capacity has been much larger, even in the recent past, we do not feel that he should pay for the present more than [illegible] Should [illegible] increase this amount would be insufficient.

"As this proceeding was begun in May the time for payment should be counted from the first of June, 1910, and for the convenience of Mrs. Beck these payments should be made monthly. We must find from the evidence that the children are so young as to be dependent for their support, education and maintenance upon their father, and this support should be rendered promptly. We therefore direct that the defendant, Harry J. Beck, pay to his wife, Dorothy Beck, for the present, the monthly sum of $40, payable monthly in advance, to be computed from the first day of June, 1910. The payments for September and ensuing months to begin with the first of September. The monthly installments for the past months of June, July and August to be paid to the said Dorothy Beck in reasonable amounts, the whole to be paid not later than the first of January, 1911. If the defendant complies promptly and in a fair spirit with this order we will not call him in for formal sentence, but we reserve the right to make a formal decree or impose a sentence upon such terms as the facts in the future may warrant.

"We also direct the defendant to pay the costs of this proceeding and enter into a bond in the sum of $500, conditioned for the complying with this and future orders of the Court, the said bond to be approved by the Court.

Christian Endeavor Convention.

The eighteenth annual Christian Endeavor convention, held at Pine Grove Mills, on August 31 and September 1, was a splendid success, being attended by about sixty delegates. A most interesting program was rendered. Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: Rev. B. S. Foust, Howard, president; H. W. Packer, Blanchard, first vice president; J. W. Morrison Blanchard; second vice president; Maude Thomas, Howard, recording secretary; Mrs. Nancy Williams, Fleming, corresponding secretary; Rev. F. S. Shultz, Pine Grove Mills, treasurer.

Will Hold Rummage Sale.

The Ladies Auxiliary of the Bellefonte hospital will hold a rummage sale, beginning Saturday, September 24, and continuing several days, in the room adjoining Finklestine's store, in the Bush Arcade. They will, during the week of September 19, gladly receive anything which may be available for their sale. The receipts will, of course, go to the Bellefonte hospital, so that all persons patronizing the sale will not only pick up some fine bargains but at the same time will be helping one of the best institution in the State.

FOREST FIRES IN 1910

Record for Year Worst in Long Time—Waiting for Fall Rains.

Officials of the U. S. Department of Agriculture are of the opinion that 1910 will hold the record among many years for the severity of the losses from forest fires. The summer fires followed a spring season believed to have been the worst, certainly in the Lake States, known for a long time. Nor is it wise to assume that the danger is over when the fierce conflagrations which have called forth in the Mountain States the efforts of three Federal Departments have been conquered. The forests will not be safe until the fall rains and snows have once more made a wet blanket of the dry forest floor. That the total losses of the year will run up to many millions of dollars is considered certain.

How such losses may be prevented is a matter of general public concern. To the National Forest timber burned must be added great amounts on State and private holdings, besides the immense damage done to town, farm, and other property. Railroads have suffered from the interruption of traffic as well as from direct losses. A bulletin by Forester Henry S. Graves discusses forest fires and the proper methods of preventing and fighting them, as follows:

"In some sections of the country forest fires have always been of such common occurrence that there is a popular notion that they can not be prevented. The risk from fires can never be entirely eliminated, for in the forest there is always inflammable material which is very easily ignited. They may, however, be largely prevented, and under efficient organization their damage may be kept down to a very small amount. The problem is like that in cities, where fires can never be entirely eliminated, but where the risk of loss to property may be reduced almost to insignificance."

After describing how surface fires may be put out by beating, by throwing sand or loose earth, and by other methods, the account goes on:

"Sometimes the front of the fire is so fierce that it is impossible to meet it directly. One method under such circumstances is to direct the course of the fire. The attack is made on the sides near the front, separating the forward portion of the fire from the main wings. A part of the crew attacks the forward part and others run down and extinguish the wings. The front of the fire, attacked from the sides, is forced gradually and constantly into a narrower path. Usually the front can be directed toward some cleared space, road, pond, stream, swamp, or fire line, when it will be [illegible] by working from the sides, until it is at last entirely extinguished. The plan of giving direction to the course of the fire has often been successfully carried out when the fighting crew is too small for a direct attack.

"When fires gain such headway that it is impossible to stop them by direct attack, no matter how numerous and efficient the crew or complete the equipment for fighting, back firing becomes the only means of stopping the fire. It should, however, be used only when it is absolutely necessary. One of the commonest mistakes in fighting fires is to overestimate the rapidity of the fire and the difficulty of putting it out. A forest fire is always a frightening spectacle, particularly if it is sweeping in the direction of one's own property. Men often become excited and start back fires when it is entirely unnecessary. Back firing neeessarily involves deliberately burning over property. When this belongs to another person and one's own forest seems in danger, there is a great temptation to sacrifice it.

"If it is found that a back fire is necessary, a favorable point is selected directly in front of the fire, from which to set the new fire. This must be a point where it is safe to start a back fire, such as a road, fire line, stream, or swamp. The leaves are ignited at points five feet to a rod apart for a distance not greater than the estimated width of the head of the fire. These small fires gradually meet and form a continuous line, eating back against the wind. A part of the crew is stationed across the road or other break from which the back fire is started and put out at once the small fires which may result from the sparks blown over from the back fire.

"The meeting of the two fires stops at once the head of the main fire. It is usually possible then to attack the wings with the ordinary methods of fighting. It is necessary to attack the wings at once, particularly if there is a strong wind, for otherwise each wing of the old fire would soon form an independent fire with a well-developed head. It is necessary, also, that a number of men be stationed where the original fire and the back fire meet in order to extinguish smoldering fires in tops, logs, and other debris."

"A fire is never out," the bulletin concludes, "until the last spark is extinguished. Often a log or snag will smolder unnoticed after the flames have apparently been conquered, only to break out afresh with a rising wind. After the fire-fighting crew has left the ground it always well to assign at least one man to patrol the edges of the burned area until it is certain that the fire is entirely out. This may not be for several days."

President Taft on the Issues.

In his admirable letter to Chairman McKinley of the Republican Congressional Committee, who had requested a statement of reasons why voters in the coming election should support Republican candidates for Congress, President Taft sounds the keynote for the campaign when he declares that it must be one of education in order to correct the wholesale misrepresentations with which the foes of the party have sought to obscure the real issues. The President writes with dignity and restraint, as befits his high office, but it is evident that he feels keenly the injustice of the attacks that have been made upon the administration and its supporters, and is sure that when the facts are brought home to the intelligent voters they will be in no doubt as to which is the party of "construction and progress" and which the party of "obstruction and negation." In pursuance of this policy President Taft presents a resume of the progressive legislation achieved by the Republican majority in the present Congress and a forecast of the measures to be enacted into law if this enlightened majority is continued in power, the whole constituting a most valuable contribution to the campaign of education upon which the party is now entering.

There is the record on the statute books to sustain the President's forcible assertion that while differences within the party have arisen in the two sessions of the present Congress, never in its history has the Republican party instituted and become responsible for a greater amount of useful and progressive legislation [illegible] logical conclusion [illegible] details of further legislation, they will continue to get together in the interest of the common good and carry out a program of genuine progress. No one Congress, as President Taft points out, could hope to fulfill every detail of such an extensive legislative program as was outlined in the Republican national platform of 1908, but it can and will be done in the lifetime of one administration, provided the opportunity is given by the voters of the country. Sufficient has been accomplished already in the way of redeeming party pledges to demonstrate the earnest intention of Republicans to fulfill every obligation.

In the nature of things, the tariff is bound to be the subject around which chief discussion will center. On no point has there been more misrepresentation than on President Taft's attitude toward this splendid piece of legislation. In signing the bill he stated clearly the reasons why he gave it his approval as a sincere effort to comply with the promises of the platform, providing a substantial downward revision of duties, with many admirable new features. Now, after the measure has had a thorough trying out, the President shows its effectiveness as a revenue producer and emphasizes the fact that its operation has been accompanied by a period of great industrial activity in production, transportation and distribution. There has been a decided increase in the imports of manufacturers' material, indicating more employment for wage earners. The President's reference to the railroad bill, the postal savings banks bill, the labor and conservation measure, and other legislative achievements to the credit of the Republican party, provide many additional reasons for continuing the party of progress in power.

A vigorous, aggressive campaign of education which shall impress the voters with the plain facts of Republican efficiency and honesty should leave no doubt as to the result in November, and those in charge will have an array of unanswerable arguments in President Taft's letter to Chairman McKinley. Pittsburg Gazette Times.

The Difference.

Teacher—Now do you see the difference between animal instinct and human reason?

Bright Boy—Yes'm. If we had instinct we'd know everything we needed to without learning it, but we've got reason and have to study ourselves mos' blind or be a fool.

TALKING PICTURES

Edison Gives Remarkable Demonstration of Latest Invention.

"I take very great pleasure, gentlemen, in asking you to watch positively the last appearance of the stage door Johnny. He simply can't fall in love, you know, with a girl the one-hundred thousandth part of an inch thick."

With these remarks Thomas A. Edison last week began the first demonstration that has been given to any but his own experts of his kineophone, otherwise his talking pictures. A dozen newspaper men composed the audience that saw, and heard, the performance at the West Orange laboratories.

The picture that was thrown on the screen explained itself literally. The figure of a man stepped forward, bowed and then began to talk—the lips moving in perfect, unmistakable unison with the words that couldn't have come from any other place, it seemed.

The man dropped a croquet ball; its impact sounded instantly from the floor. He pounded the table with a little hammer and there wasn't the fraction of a second between the sight and sound of the blow. He dropped a plate, as the pieces flew the crack resounded and the demonstration was at an end.

The phonograph from which the sound of the voice and that of the "business" came from was behind the screen. The machine from which the pictures were projected was at the other end of the room, yet the synchronism was perfect. Wires attached to the projecting mechanism controlled the two and their unity was as perfect as that which the record of the one and the film of the other had made.

"I'm going to put Metropolitan grand opera into the hamlets of Illinois in a couple of years,' said Mr. Edison afterward. "I'm going to take John Drew into parts of Iowa he never heard of. Finally, I'm going to take Colonel Roosevelt to the cabins of the prairies with his campaign speeches. We've got it now.

Two years have been spent in perfecting these talking pictures. The old devices of having actors talk behind the screens or of taking phonograph records after the pictures have been taken have been done away with entirely. The records for eye and ear are made at the same time."

The great obstacle that Mr. Edison had to overcome was in getting a phonograph that could "hear" far enuf. At the beginning of the experiences the actor had to talk directly into the horn, which made it impossible to get the right kind of pictures. Bit by bit, however, a machine was perfected which could "hear" so well that the actor could move at his pleasure within a radius of [illegible] now.

A complete drama has already been "made" in these pictures, but only for experimental purposes. It will not be shown; nothing will be shown until the talking pictures can take a Broadway production out with them.

"This isn't for nickleodeons," Mr. Edison explained. "This is a big, a serious thing, and I'm not going to put it out until I can put it out the way it should be done."

The demonstration lacked verisimilitude in but one instance. The sound of the breaking plate was somewhat "wooden," but every other sound was as true to life as could be. It was uncannily so, as a matter of fact.

"Business."

"Too many Americans of the twentieth century," said Jacob A. Riis; in an address in New York. "have a wrong idea of business. Now business is, really, honest service—honest service—nothing but that.

"But too many men look on business as a certain seaside shopkeeper did.

"A friend of mine visited this man's shop to buy a flannel bathing suit. The bathing suits were all a little too large for him.

"They're marked unshrinkable' my friend said, thoughtfully. 'This one here might do if it would shrink. But—'

"I'll ask father about it,' said the young attendant.

"And then, behind the partition, my friend overheard this dialogue:

"Father a gent wants to know if our unshrinkable bathing suits won't shrink a little anyway.'

"Is the suit too large for him?'

"Yes father.'

"Then of course, it will shrink. Why don't yon try and have some head for business, Willie?"

Was Silent Thirty-One Years.

Silas Hoffman, the strange man of Bedminster, who kept his bed while apparently in perfect health and refused to speak for thirty-one years, is dead.

He passed away recently without breaking the silence which he had preserved for so long a time, but just before he died he made an effort to speak to his devoted sister, Mrs. Margaret Lane, who cared for him in his lonely habitation throughout his eccentric career. It was too late, however, the years of silence had deprived him of the power of articulation.

Hoffman's strange conduct has made him a subject of comment among the country people of Bedmister Township for so many years that he had ceased to be an object of curiosity to his neighbors, who were inclined to shield him from public gaze, and even now are attempting to keep his death a secret, out of fear that it would cause a curious crowd to gather there from all the countryside.

His funeral was held on Thursday from the house where he died. He was 67 years old. Whether he was insane was never determined, although he had been examined by a score of physicians, with a view to ascertaining his mental condition. His eternal silence and his blank smile baffled all alienists, and physicians often said he could not be declared insane, as his condition was apparently normal.

Hoffman was one of five sons of a prosperous farmer of Bedminster Township. The other four are living and are prominent in the agricultural and business life of Somerset County.

Hoffman spent his early life like his brothers, on his father's farm. At the age of 30 he possessed a farm and was the owner of a spanking team of gray horses, of which he was very proud. He was fond of society, and was known all around as a gay young man.

Misfortune overtook him. He lost his farm and his pet team of horses had to be sacrificed. Inconsolable, he went to bed and turned his face to the wall, and for a long time refused either to speak or eat. Food was left on a table near his bed, and when he was nearly starved he arose one night from his bed and ate and took a stroll out of doors.

He continued to arise each night thereafter and eat and take a walk, until one night when he slipped on the ice and broke his arm. After that accident he never arose from his bed or passed out of the door.

In all these years he was cared for like an infant by his widow sister, Mrs. Margaret Lane, out of her scanty income and $3 a week which she received for his maintenance from Bedminster Township.

Physicians have been expecting Hoffman to die every year for the last decade [illegible] been so low that at times his heart almost failed to beat, and for several days before his death his attending physician could not detect any pulse.—New York Tribune.

Woman and Tobacco.

A pleasant time was the portion of all the women concerned the other day in an aminated discussion of the propriety of cigarette smoking by their sex. The debate took place in the town of Pittsburg, famous for its steel industry, its atmosphere and the explosive ways of its gilded youth. Starting incidentally in a typically feminine way, an absent member of the sex being pulled to pieces with chivalrous frankness, the discussion rapidly expanded from personal to general proportions. It stopped without reaching a conclusion when a woman with a sense of humor made a pointed reference to "our great-grandmothers, who smoked corncob pipes." She forgot to wave the snuff-stick as well in the faces of the censorious majority.

In all this volume of talk there was apparently only one argument pro, but that a potent one—woman's no longer seriously opposed right to do as she pleases "so long as she does not tread on any one else's toes," the any one else for whose benefit this reservation was made being, of course, of the feminine gender. Men do not really count any longer where emancipated woman's right to do as she pleases is concerned. The arguments contra varied from the example which women in prominent places should set to the young daughters of the land to strictly individual prejudices, one matron declaring that a woman who smoked was as suspect to her as a woman who bleached her hair. But hasn't a woman a right to do as she pleases with her own hair, and with "store hair," too, for that matter? That was abundantly proved by the coiffures in both our opera houses last season. Moreover, it depends upon how she bleaches it. If it be done with sufficient art she will not be looked down upon with suspicion at all, while if she botches the job or prolongs it unduly the look will not be suspicious, but one of rapid mental calculation, with the year of her debut or the height of her eldest as the known quantity. But we are digressing.

It is worth mentioning that in all this mingling of arguments, moral, social and personal, the most important question in regard to woman's smoking was first referred to once, so far as the reports show, namely, the health and strength of future generations. New York Tribune.

A Reliable Medicine—Not a Narcotic.

Mrs. F. Marti, St Joe, Mich., says Foley's Honey and Tar saved her little boys's life. She writes: "Our little boy contracted a severe bronchial trouble and as the doctor's medicine did not cure him, I gave him Foley's Honey and Tar in which I have great faith. It cured the cough as well as the choking and gagging spells, and he got well in a short time. Foley's Honey and Tar has many times saved us much trouble and we are never without it in the house." DOCTORS FAILED. RESTORED BY PERUNA.

Catarrh of the Lungs Threatened Her Life.

"I had several hemorrhages of the lungs. The doctors did not help me much and would never have cured me.

"I was not able to wait on myself when I began using it. I gained very slowly at first, but I could see that it was helping me.

September at the Seashore

REDUCED FARES ACCOUNT G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT.

The rolling ocean with its boundless prospect is ever interesting; but at no time is it more enticing than during the month of September. The bathing is at its best. The sailing is ideal. The salt sea air is charged with increased invigoration, and there is a geniality about it unknown during the torrid days of summer.

Atlantic City, Ocean City, Sea Isle City, Avalon, Stone Harbor, Anglesea, Wildwood, Holly Beach, Wildwood Crest, and Cape May are all prepared to entertain with exceptional hospitality all guests who may come. The hotels are less crowded and more comfortable; the service is better, and in most instances the rates are lower.

The train service of the Pennsylvania Railroad to all these resorts will be found convenient and comprehensive.

Excursion tickets to Atlantic City will be sold at reduced fares on September 16, 17. 18, 19, and 20, on account of the G. A. R. National Encampment, good returning to reach original starting point not later than September 28. For stop-over privileges and extension of return limit, to October 28, consult Ticket Agents.

FREAK TREASURY NOTES

The Face of the Bill, Not the Back, Indicates its Value.

Despite the careful scrutiny given every bill that leaves the bureau of engraving and printing, a number of "freak" notes find their way into circulation from time to time. Such a one was a note that once came to the subtreasury at New York. It had the imprint of a twenty dollar note on one side and of a ten on the other. But, inasmuch as the face showed the figures 20, $20 was the legal value of the bill.

In most cases the "freak" bills that have escaped the vigilance of the bureau's officers are national banknotes, which, like the regular treasury notes are printed there. As i[illegible]ated already, the face value is always recognized when the "freaks" come to be cashed at any branch of the teasury. The imprint on the back has no lawful status whatever.

The notes are printed in sheets. Usually there will be one twenty and two tens on a sheet. They are printed one side at a time, so it can readily be seen that the printer in turning over the sheet might get it upside down and thus put a ten dollar back on a twenty dollar note, or a twenty on one of the tens.

When errors are discovered the misprinted sheet is laid aside to be destroyed. It cannot be torn up at once, for every sheet has to be accounted for. After some formalities it is ground into pulp.

Almost all the "freak" bills that have been issued in the past have found they way back to the treasury, there to be destroyed. It is thought that very few of them are now scattered about, and there are for the most part in the hands of curio hunters.—Harper's Weekly.

Equals.

The captain of a boat is an absolute monarch, and the equal of every other boat captain, no matter how much bigger or better his boat. A writer in the Housekeeper tells of a brief but significant conversation which was held across the water which separated an Atlantic liner coming up New York Bay and a grimy coal barge

"Clear out of the way with that old mud scow!" shouted an officer on the bridge.

"Are ye the captain of that vessel?"

"No," answered the officer.

"Then spake to yer equals. I'm the captain of this!" came from the barge.

Knocking at the Back Door.

"By utterance of the local papers that have declared their opposition to the ticket nominated by the Republicans at the primary election, and a dispatch appearing in the Sunday edition of some of the state's metropolitan papers it is noticed that F. R. Scofield, burgess of DuBois, has concluded to become an independent candidate for state senator. Although we have always been on very friendly terms personally with Mr. Scofield, and the Courier decidely friendly to him politically, this appears to us like a very ill-considered adventure. Mr. Scofield came before the people for the nomination at the time of the Republican primary. His competitors were P. E. Womelsdorff, of Philipsburg, and Joseph Alexander, of Madera. Judged by their records the three stood for very much the same thing politically.

"Alexander received more votes than either Scofield or Womelsdorff and was declared the nominee. Nobody pretended that there was anything but absolutely fair competition.

"The result of the primary makes it very clear that Mr. Scofield does not now become a candidate at the call of the people. Every vote cast for Alexander and Womelsdorff was a vote against Scofield for the nomination, and he failed to get a plurality. His vote was something more than onehalf the total number polled.

"Had he not been a candidate previous to the primary and given the voters a chance to register their will so recently, coming through the backdoor now would introduce him in a different light. With the direct primary election system of making nominations in vogue, the candidate who loses in a contest is not in position to call out, as he could in convention days, that popular clamor is so pressing that he cannot resist running for the office independent of his party.

"The man who repudiates the action of a convention that turns him down, or the one that has not been through the primary election contest and failed, stands on much better ground for an independent effort than Mr. Scofield does."—"DuBois Morning Courier."

Removing Rust.

Rust often can be removed by hard rubbing with a cloth dipped in sweet oil or coal oil. Let the article soak in the oil several hours. Rubbing with fine sand paper is also good.

How to be Handsome.

To be handsome is not always to be good, but there is surely no harm in being handsome if you can become so without spoiling your face. For years I was considered homely. My best friends admitted it, and my enemies made unkind reference to it. I knew that there were dermatologists who were perfectly willing to give silver bridges to bridgeless noses, lazzling brilliance to lack-luster eyes and ravishing outlines to hideous profiles, but I did not care to go to the expense. I determined to be my own dermatologist.

I have drawn an outline of my profile as it was before I began to work on my face. It will be seen that, while intellectual, it was not handsome. My ear was too long, and my nose too like a toe, while my brow needed building up, and my chin pushed forward. My eye, while not beautiful, had character, and I decided not to alter that, but the other features needed manipulation.

I began with my nose. When I went to bed I lay on my back with a flatiron bound to my nose. It was painful at first but I soon go used to it, and day by day my nose changed its shape until at last it was perfect. I next tried sleeping standing up in a specially prepared bed, with heavy weights hung to my chin. This had a tendency to bring my chin forward. Luckily I was out of a job, so I was able to do my sleeping in the daytime. To give myself a high brow I made a hat like those used by hatters to ascertain the size of the head. This I screwed on my head on retiring, increasing the pressure each night. I also took double doses of headache powders, as I needed them. As I look back it does not seem more than six months that I labored with my visage, but my diary tells me it took a year.

I append a profile of my face as it was after I had secured beauty for myself. The difference between the two profiles is great, and the torture was great, but it is certainly pleasant to have people say whenever I appear in public: "Who is that strikingly handsome man?"—Charles Battell Loomisin the Delineator.

The Road to Matrimony.

It is no surprise to learn that plain-faced cashiers are so extremely rare in St. Louis that they must be advertised for; and the only reason given for the advertisement is that five cashiers have been married from behind the desk in the past twelve months and that the advertising venture is a desperate effort to reduce this constant procession of trained helpers to the hymeneal altar.

It seems a useless attempt, for the attractive charms of cashiers are in no way confined to mere faultless complexions or regularity of feature. Every girl is endowed with a more or less generous capital in the lists or sentiment and every girl is sure to be some man's better half if he is fortunate enough to find her and happily secures favor in her eyes.

In these days of bountiful work for women, maidens fair do not feel any impulsion of haste in choosing. The man who persuades a self-supporting young woman to marry him ought to feel flattered.

While we sympathize deeply with St. Louis firms which can not keep a beautiful cashier any longer than from Monday until Saturday on account of the matrimonial raids of nice, likely looking young men, we can scarcely help from uttering three cheers—in which we feel confident we shall be joined and re-enforced by numerous worthy citizens who have flats to rent—just suited to the requirements of young married couples.

Didn't Need a Wife.

Down in the south part of the state there lives one of our modern intensive farmers, who in the course of his life on the farm became fairly well off in worldly goods. He is also modern in educational ideas and his several daughters have all had the advantages of college education.

One of the girls, particularly well gifted, became the object of devotion of a young swain on an adjoining farm. She treated him nicely, though not as one in love with him. The young fellow thought he would like to marry her, but was a trifle bashful and too modest to propose to her. As a last resort he took heart and wrote the following letter to her father:

"Dere sur: I luv youre dater Millie and wud lik her hand. She lovs me, to, I gess, and I think I nede a wif."

His reply was as follows:

"Dear Sir: You don't need a wife. You need a school teacher."

When Hands Perspire.

If one's hands perspire a tiny piece of absorbent cotton slipped into the palm of the glove when putting on gloves will prevent unsightly marks. This will be found more efficacious than a liberal sprinkling of powder, though that, too, is good.

GRANGERS ARE READY FOR ANNUAL PICNIC

Plans For Thirty-seventh Encampment and Exhibition.

HAVE A FINE PROGRAM

John K. Tener, Republican Nominee for Governor, Unable to Attend—Congressional Nominee Charles E. Patton Will be Present.

Next week marks the thirty-seventh annual encampment and exhibition of the Patrons of Husbandry, otherwise and more popularly known as the "Grangers Picnic," at Grange Park, Centre Hall. The big event will be formally opened on Saturday and will continue until Friday, September 16.

No little disappointment was occasioned this week by the receipt of word from State Chairman Walton that John K. Tener, the Republican nominee for Governor, will be unable to be present on Thursday, September 15, as was originally planned. It is customary for the gubernatorial candidate to attend the annual convention of the State League of Republican Clubs, which event is this year scheduled for Pottsville. Mr. Tener will, therefore, be in Pottsville on Thursday, the 15th. He had expressed his desire to visit Centre County before the close of the campaign. Charles E. Patton, the popular Republican nominee for Congress, will be at Grange Park, on the 15th. It is Mr. Patton's desire to meet as many Centre County voters as possible before election day, in November.

Special trains will be run on the Lewisburg and Tyrone Railroad between Bellefonte and Coburn for Grange Park, Centre Hall, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, and excursion tickets will be sold from Friday, the 9th of September, good going until the 16th, and returning until the 19th.

THE PROGRAM.

Saturday, September 10th—Opening of camp, when tents will be in readiness for all who have engaged them.

7:30 p. m.—Grand Opening of Evening Entertainments in the auditorium, by the Scorer Amusement Company of Philadelphia. Mr. Scorer himself will lead in one of his best entertainments, which assures an evening of mirth and instruction for every one.

Harvest Home services Sunday, September 11th, at 2:30 p. m. The anniversary sermon will be preached by Dr. W. H. Schuyler, of Centre Hall, subject "The Old Testament Farmer." All are invited to participate in the services, and thus encourage the farmers in their annual harvest home celebration.

Monday, September 12th—Opening of Exhibition. This will be the day for the general placing of exhibits, and exhibitors are urged to bring as large a percentage as their exhibits on that day as possible, so that there may be a creditable display on Tuesday, the day of the Soldiers Reunion. Exhibits will be received every day during the fair and should remain until Friday.

Monday evening, 7:30—Mrs. Cora Robertson, the English Musical Entertainer, will lead in the entertainment assisted by the Scorer Company.

Tuesday, September 13—Reunion of the Centre County Veteran Club and Soldiers of the Civil War. Every patriotic citizen should turn out and cordially welcome these Veterans of the Civil War. Addresses will be delivered in the auditorium by well known speakers both in the morning and afternoon.

Evening entertainment at 7:30—The Scorer Amusement Company will give their third entertainment in which the Dietrics will appear, especially in magic and music. The entire company will also assist.

Wednesday, September 14th—Addresses will be delivered by representatives of the Agricultural Department at Harrisburg, both morning and afternoon. Speakers will be Hon. N. B. Critchfield, Secretary of Agricultural; Hon. A. L. Martin, Director of Institutes, and Hon. James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner.

Wednesday evening, 7:30—The Scorer Company will give an entirely new role.

Thursday, September 15th—Grange Day. Addresses will be delivered by Hon. W. T. Creasy, Master State Grange; Hon. J. T. Allman, Secretary State Grange; Mr. E. B. Dorsett, Lecturer of State Grange, and by members of the State Grange Executive Committee. The Executive Committee in connection with the committee on co-operation will hold a meeting on the ground during the entire week.

Thursday evening, 7:30—The last evening entertainment of the week will be given by the entire Scorer Company with an entire new program.

Friday, September 16th—Friday will be sales day and a general rounding up of the entertainments and business.

SCHOOL CLOCK MYSTERY

"Joke" May Prove Costly One if Perpetrators are Discovered.

What was no doubt intended to be a merely harmless joke may prove to be a costly experience if the authorities discover who tampered with the $600 electrical clock in the new High School building, in Bellefonte. Possibly to call attention to the near approach of the opening of the public schools, some boy or boys on Sunday night, last, entered the new High School building and so manipulated the large electrical clock in the superintendent's room to cause a continuous ringing of the gongs at the two main entrances. For an hour or more the gongs continued to ring and finally Edmund Hayes entered the building and stopped the clock.

Just what damage was caused to the clock has not been determined and probably will not be known until it has been examined by an expert from the company which installed it in the building. On Tuesday the clock was of little use, failing to keep anything like regular time. Yesterday, however, it appeared to be running as if nothing had happened. There has been some talk of arresting the persons who started the trouble although by some members of the School Board it is thought that the boys will be sufficiently punished if they or their parents are compelled to pay for whatever damage has been done. The clock in question is automatic and self-winding and regulates all of the clocks in the building and also the class gongs.

When the public schools opened on Monday morning, last, there was a rush of children in the primary grades for admission to the new building. To avoid congestion it will be necessary to divide the scholars for this grade according to locality; that is, those residing nearest the new building to attend there, and those living near the old brick building, to attend at that place.

UNITED STATES POST OFFICE

Suggests Private Receptacles for Household Mail.

By direction of the Post Office Department, the attention of the patrons of the Bellefonte office is invited to the advantages of providing facilities for the receipt of their mail by erecting conveniently accessible boxes or cutting suitable slots in their doors. Such action would enable the postmaster to give a prompter and better delivery service with the means at his disposal, since the carriers can cover much more territory in less time if not compelled to wait for an answer to their ring. Private receptacles for mail are also a great convenience to the householder, obviating the necessity of responding to the carrier's call at inconvenient moments and permitting the safe delivery of mail in the absence of the household. They also prevent the occasional necessity of a carrier proceeding on his route without delivering mail because of failure to answer his ring within a reasonable time, and enable him to make deliveries to patrons living on or near the end of the route at an earlier hour.

It has been shown by actual experience that the benefits derived by patrons of city delivery from the use of such receptacles far outweigh the small expense involved. As this office is interested in furnishing the best possible service at the least expense, your compliance with the foregoing suggestions will be much appreciated.

Respectfully,
T. H. HARTER, Postmaster.

Miss Mothersbaugh Weds.

On Wednesday, at noon, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. Mothersbaugh, at Boalsburg, their daughter, Miss Margaret Mothersbaugh, became the wife of Reuben Stewart, of Pittsburg. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. A. Black, formerly the bride's pastor, in the presence of about 100 friends. After a sumptuous wedding dinner, the happy couple departed for their honeymoon, which embraces a trip to Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, D. C. They will make their home in Pittsburg, where the groom has a splendid position. The bride is one of Boalsburg's most popular school teachers and is a young woman who is well qualified to grace a home.

Were Quietly Married.

On Tuesday, Isaac Rider and his fiance, Miss Ritta Strayer, slipped away from their Gatesburg friends and went to Pine Grove Mills, where Rev. F. S. Shultz said the words which made them man and wife. After receiving congratulations the happy young couple returned to Gatesburg, where a splendid wedding supper was served at the Dearmit home. Both of the young folks are well and favorably known and their many friends wish for them a prosperous and happy journey through life.

Married by Squire Musser.

William G. Slagle, of State College, and Miss Ruth N. Hubler, of Rebersburg, were married on Tuesday morning, at 11 o'clock, by Squire W. H. Musser, at the latter's office, at Bellefonte. The groom is an electrician and an exemplary young man. The bride is popular among her circle of friends in Rebersburg.

MRS. THOMAS LINGLE

Well Known Resident of Blanchard Dies After Long Illness.

Mrs. Thomas Lingle died at her late home, at Blanchard, on Thursday morning, last, after an illness of about eleven weeks. Death was caused by a tumor of the abdomen. Prior to her marriage she was Miss Susan Williams, a daughter of the late William Williams. She spent virtually all of her life at Blanchard. By a wide circle of friends she was held in high esteem and her death is mourned by all. Deceased was aged 73 years and is survived by her husband and the following children: Mrs. John Bathurst and Harvey K. Lingle, of Blanchard; Mrs. George Delong, of Medix Run, and Simon Lingle, of Pittsburg. Funeral services were held on Sunday afternoon, interment being made in the Disciple cemetery. The services were conducted by Rev. W. H. Patterson and the pallbearers were Charles W. Cook, Thomas Bechdel, Williams Kunes, Nathan J. Bitner, G. Mackey Johnson and John B. Miller.

MRS. SARAH DEHAAS.

Mrs. Sarah DeHaas, one of Beech Creek's best known residents, died at her late home at that place, on Friday, last, aged 80 years. She was a Christian woman and was held in high regard by all who knew her. Deceased was the widow of the late Alexander M. DeHaas and was born in Leicester, England, in 1825. She was the daughter of Nathaniel Johnson, who removed to this country in 1828, and was one of a family of nine children, of whom but three now survive, as follows; Mrs. George W. Lingle, of Bellefonte; Mrs. Annie Fearon, of Beech Creek, and William Johnson of Conneaut, Ohio. Surviving Mrs. DeHaas are the following children: Forest DeHaas of Homestead; Mrs. Virgie Devling of Lock Haven; J. Willis DeHaas, of St. Mary's; Mrs Florence Richards, of Tioga county; C. Wood DeHaas, of Johnsonburg; and Grant DeHaas, of Marquette, Michigan. Funeral services were held on Saturday, with interment in the Fearon cemetery.

ABRAHAM ARMSTRONG.

After an illness covering a period of several months, Abraham Armstrong died about 9 o'clock, Wednesday morning, at his late residence, on Water Street. His death was caused by Bright's disease. Deceased was aged about 50 years and was well and favorably known in Bellefonte. For a number of years he was employed at the Bush House, remaining there until several months ago, when he was forced to retire owing to ill health. Surviving are a widow and three children, Mary, Irene and Curtin.

DECOYED IN AUTOMOBILE

Beech Creek Merchant Finds Warrant While on Pleasure Trip.

The Lock Haven "Express," on Tuesday published the following, under a Beech Creek date line:

A dispute exists between a local clothing merchant and a man from Milesburg, who installed a gasoline lighting plant in the store of the former in this place recently, the point at issue being over the price charged for an extra attachment for heating an iron for pressing clothes, the differences between the men amounting to about ten dollars. After several discussions, the Milesburg man went before a justice of that borough and obtained a warrant which he brought to Blanchard Thursday evening and gave to Constable William Coder, of Liberty township, and then came to this place in his automobile.

The question was how to get service on the man of this place, in Centre county. The son of the Milesburg man was running the car and when his father got out he took in too boys and then asked the merchant to take a ride. He and his clerk enthusiastically consented and during the ride a run was made to Marsh Creek, and when returning through Blanchard, Constable Coder signaled the auto to stop and read the warrant to the unsuspecting clothier, who was not at all pleased at the manner in which he had been 'taken in.' The case will be tried at Milesburg soon."

Tuesday's Elections.

Elections were held on Tuesday in Vermont, Wisconsin, New Hampshire and Michigan, with the following results:

Vermont Republicans elected their entire State ticket, both members of Congress and a majority of the State Legislature. The vote was exceptionally light. John A. Mead was elected Governor.

In Wisconsin the election was to determine Republican and Democratic nominations for United States Senator. Indications are that Senator LaFollette won out over Samuel A. Cook for the Republican nomination.

New Hampshire had its first experience with direct primaries. Indications are that Robert P. Bass has been nominated for Governor.

Incomplete returns from the election in Michigan seemed to indicate that Representative Townsend is slightly leading J. C. Burrows for Republican indorsement for United States Senator. The contest for nomination for Governor on the Republican ticket is close between Patrick H. Kelley and Charles S. Osburn.

FARMER BADLY HURT

Frank Meskill, of Cedar Run Falls, From Hay Mow Onto Reaper.

Frank Meskill of Cedar Run, who with his father-in-law, H. D. Earon, conducts a dairy farm met with a most painful and serious accident Saturday evening, and his escape from instant death is almost a miracle, says the Lock Haven "Democrat."

The young man had gone to the barn to feed the stock, and went up into the hay mow to throw down hay, and after having done so crossed to a mow containing a large quantity of wheat straw.

In starting for the ladder to descend his feet slipped and he was thrown to the barn floor below.

A reaper was standing on the floor and unfortunately the steel knife guards were pointed up, one of which entered his throat, puncturing his windpipe, severing a couple of blood vessels and making a frightful wound. Unaided he withdrew the steel guard from his throat and started for the house, but the loss of blood so weakened him, that he had to stop and lean against the fence for support. In this position he was found a few moments later by his wife, who summoned assistance and the unfortunate man was taken to the house, and Dr. McGhee, of Mill Hall, was summoned and placing him in his auto made a very fast run to the Lock Haven hospital, where he was given treatment, after which he rested fairly well. The hospital reports that he is resting comfortably and that his injuries should not prove fatal, which will be glad news to his family and many acquaintances.

A BANK ACCOUNT

We do not advise any one to be a miser, for every man owes himself the necessary comforts of life: neither do we advise you to be known as a "spender" by your associates. It may sound flattering but the man who has a bank account and saves at least a small part of his wages stands head and shoulders above the spendthrift in any community.

BOY'S HAND SHOT OFF

7-Years-Old Frank Mendis Meets With Unfortunate Mishap.

Little Frank Mendis, the 7-years-old son of Peter Mendis, met with a distressing accident, on Friday, last, a railroad signal cap exploding and blowing off a part of his left hand. The thumb and two of his fingers were shot off and he also sustained painful powder burns on the body.

The young man's father is a junk dealer and it is supposed that the railroad signal cap happened to be in a pile of old scrap iron stored in the barn in the rear of the house. Frank found the cap and boy-like proceeded to see what was inside of it. He used a hatchet and crowbar and with the first blow the cap exploded, with the result as stated. The young man's screams attracted the attention of other members of the family and he was removed at once to the hospital, where the injured hand was dressed. For a time it was feared that blood poison might develop, but now it is believed that he will soon be about again.

This is the second sad case in the Mendis family in a short time, another child being afflicted with infantile paralysis.

"BACK TO THE FARM"

VIII.—The Country Girl's Career.

By C. V. GREGORY.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

OUR most appreciated blessings are seldom the ones that are closest at hand. Just as the country bred boy sometimes gets an idea that he has a genius too broad to be confined between the boundaries of his father's farm, so the girl who has grown up in the country sometimes gets a longing for a glimpse of the unknown world within the city's walls. The imaginative girl often feels that her talents will be more appreciated in the city than in the little home town. She imagines herself burning with a genius for acting, perhaps, and longs for the glare of the footlights and the plaudits of the crowd, or perhaps it is art in one of its many disguises that is calling her to the artificial life of paved streets and brick walls.

Occasionally it is the lights, the music and the pleasures of a swiftly flowing city life that attract the girl from the country, but not often. The girl who is a true daughter of the country is seldom deceived by the glare of a light whose shadow covers tears and sorrow or the pleasure that is but a mask for pain. We are told that the "glamour" of the city life is the force that draws the country girls to town. Nothing of the sort. There is little glamour about the city for the healthy girl. The first thought of the country girl when she finds herself in the city is "how dirty" or "how awfully crowded." But notwithstanding the dirt and the crowds she often remains. She stays because she is ambitious to have a "career." There is a true hearted farmer boy back home probably who would be glad to take her into partnership. But in the past the girl has seldom been taught to look forward with pride to becoming a farmer's wife or to regard a life on the farm as being a career worthy of her ambition.

This is the natural outcome of the conditions for the quarter of a century when farmers were selling their produce below cost. The lot of the farmer's wife was one of almost unrelenting toil, as was that of the farmer himself. There was little to lighten the monotony of the ceaseless grind of housework. Her horizon was limited by the kitchen walls, and her highest ambition was to keep the boys out of the "best room." It is little wonder that she hoped for something better for her daughters. She saw unfolding in them her own girlhood, and she dreaded to see them spend their lives in the hopeless task of keeping body and soul together as she had done.

Her idea of city life was vague. Most of the city women she saw were well dressed, unwrinkled and seemingly happy. They were living the kind of life she would choose for her daughter. The toil of the wives of the poorer laborers she did not see. One of the main reasons that all through this period the country looked up to the city and the city looked down on the country was that country people saw only the best side of the city and the city people saw only the worst side of the country.

The change that has come about in country life in the past decade and a half is so great as to be almost unbelievable. Many of the country people themselves refuse to believe it. They read the reports of high prices skeptically, and not until the produce is sold and the money in their hands will they really believe their good fortune. Even then they will shake their heads and say that prices will surely go down before they have another crop ready for market. They have so long been content with a small return for their labor and no allowance at all for interest on their money or for the fertility which they are selling away from their land that they can hardly believe that the time has come when the farmer is getting enough for his produce to enable him to put farming on a business basis.

Probably this change has affected no one on the farm more than the women. The country girl has a different idea of a career now. She lives in a modern farm home, or if she doesn't she knows that such homes exist and are well within the range of possibility for her. She has had her longing to see the world satisfied by visits to city friends and relatives. She has seen that all the conveniences of city homes are duplicated in the country. She has admired the spacious lawns and beautiful grounds of some of the best of the city houses, but she has been observant enough to note that such houses belong only to the few. She has gone to the theater with her friends and enjoyed it, but no more than she enjoys the homemade theatricals in her home town or the plays and lectures she has attended in the larger country towns by trolley. She has been surprised to find that her friends in the city do not know their next door neighbor. The excuse that "they are not in our set" has puzzled her democratic little soul. It is different in the country, where every one sympathizes with every one else's sorrows and laughs with all in their joys.

The girl comes back from a trip to the city better satisfied than ever with her country home. Her father may not be worth more than $5,000 or $10,000 or $15,000 measured in money, but his house and grounds are equal in all essential respects to many of the millionaires' residences she saw in the city. Her girl friends in the city were coaxing their father to buy them an automobile so that they could "go somewhere." The country girl and her mother have a horse and buggy that are sacred to their use. The horse is so gentle that he will not even bat his eyelid at an automobile and the buggy so shiny that they are proud to be seen anywhere in it. They can hitch up and go where and when they please. The laundry in the basement has taken away the terrors of wash day. The conveniences in the kitchen have greatly lessened the work of feeding the hungry men folks.

The farm reading table is strewn with the latest magazines, and the girl has a piano or at least an organ. A piano dealer in one of the middle western states recently told me that he sold fifteen pianos to the farmers in one township last year. If the farmer's daughter wants a piano he is going to get it for her. He may have to raise a few more hogs next year to pay for it, but that is easily done.

Taking everything together, any comparisons that the country girl may be able to draw are favorable to the farm. She has been raised in the open air. The pigs and the calves and the chickens are her playmates. The colts will come when she whistles, for who ever heard of a country girl who couldn't whistle? She can name all the trees in the wood lot, and she knows the note of every bird that sings in their branches. Every day is full of sunshine, and she sings for the very joy of living where air is free and room is not bought and sold.

She still longs for a career, but it is a career of a different sort. She wants to live the rest of her life on the farm, and she looks forward to the day when she will go into partnership with some ambitious, resourceful young farmer. To be a successful wife, to help make the most out of the old farm and to do her part to make her community the most progressive in the country—this is the career that appeals to the modern country girl. Schools have been provided to teach her the things she needs to know about her coming business. If she is in one of the most up to date communities, she begins to learn sewing and cooking in the rural school. If not given there, it comes in the high school or the preparatory school or the small college. All of these institutions are providing courses in domestic science. They do not dispute the fact that love is the basis of a successful marriage, but they realize that a good digestion is the basis of a loving disposition.

In awakening the community to the realization of its own duties and its possibilities the influence of the farmer's wife is even greater than that of the farmer himself. It is the women on whom the social life of the country communities must largely depend. The problem of rural life is largely a social one now that conditions have solved the financial problem.

Laundry Hints Worth While.

Irons must be much hotter for starched pieces than for flannels. For these they must barely hiss under the touch of moistened finger.

To get the right finish on any piece of ironing it must be ironed until dry. Attack the starched pieces and those that require most work early in the action.

A few of the essentials to the ironing table, besides the table itself and the irons, are an iron stand, an ironholder with an asbestos lining, a bit of beeswax tied up in a piece of cheesecloth, a bowl of warm water with a sponge or a piece of soft linen with which may be dampened scallops and edgings which have become too dry to iron well, a piece of paper folded with several thicknesses on which to test the heat of the iron and to wipe any black smirch from it.

Take your clothes from the line as soon as possible after they are dry. They are likely to become too stiff if left out longer than necessary.

Be especially careful to bring starched clothes in as soon as they are dry. When it is cold the freezing takes out the stiffness, and when the weather is damp the clothes become limp.

Fruit stains on linen may be removed by pouring boiling water through them. Stretch the spotted part over a bowl and pour the boiling water on the stain. It may be necessary to repeat the treatment several times in order to remove the stains entirely. Tea and coffee stains may be eradicated by the same method. The sooner they are taken out the better. Wine stains may also be removed by the hot water applied in the same manner.

In dampening clothes for ironing use either a whisk or one of the regular clothes sprinklers which are made for this special purpose and have the water in it hot or at least warm. Sprinkle one piece at a time, spreading it out smooth before sprinkling and roll up tightly.—Philadelphia Times.

Truth About Woman.

Men are not capable of telling the truth about women, or of understanding what the truth is, because they are handicapped by their sex. The few men who have managed to forget the sex part have gone to the other extreme and have damned women unduly with loud curses, as, for example, Shopenhauer and Weininger. To tell the exact truth about women is impossible for any man. There is always a chance that while you are attempting this impossible trick you may fall in love with the woman. No woman is so homely that this might not come to pass. Ugly women and old women have been loved by young and old men since the world began. It is impossible to account for all of the eccentricities of human passion.

If a man is questioned about women in general, he will tell you in confidence that he despises them in general. They are characterless, unmoral if you will, and incapable of that sturdy kind of friendship or comradeship which men feel for each other. To argue with them on any subject would be ridiculous. They are petty, mean, below men in stature and—between you and me, says the man—they are ugly, from an anatomical standpoint. That is about what any man will tell you—in strict confidence.

But this man always knows one woman who is different. This particular woman is capable of any sacrifice. Her charity is unlimited. Her nursing power is marvelous. Her practical judgment is inevitable. Her forgiveness is unbounded and her taste perfect.

The Crops.

Advices to Bradstreet's are rather more irregular. Corn has been benefited by rains, except in parts of the southwest, where early drought damage was irreparable, but the crop is late and final outcome, depends on the date of killing frost. The bulk of the crop needs three to five weeks time to finally mature. With a late fall, like last year, a 3,000,000,000 bushel crop is possible.

Late rains have improved pasturage and aided in fall plowing and seeding. A small increase in winter-wheat planting is indicated. In some parts of the west the shortage in hay is considerable, and this is claimed to have caused farmers to market surplus live stock at a sacrifice. Hay is plentiful in the east, and in California. Clover and timothy hay seed have advanced in price.

The rains have checked the western forest fires. The Pacific northwest has had rain after an unprecedented drought, which has lowered streams to levels never before known.

Cotton reports are irregular. The rainfall in Texas has not been general, and if the drought continues a short crop is predicted. The cotton crop in the lower Mississippi valley is in good shape, but reports from Alabama are irregular. Parts of Georgia need rain, Atlanta especially reporting deterioration, but, on the other hand, Savannah reports damage to cotton from an eight-inch rainfall on August 30. The tendency is to lower estimates of cotton yield as a whole.

Refusal of country banks to finance grain loans is one reason given for the enormous movement of wheat and oats to market in August. The total movement of all grain is the largest ever recorded, and Chicago's receipts were double those of a year ago in August.

Section 1. Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, That the following amendment to the Constitution of Pennsylvania be, and the same is hereby, proposed, in accordance with the eighteenth article thereof:—

That section six of article five be amended, by striking out the said section, and inserting in place thereof the following:

Section 6. In the county of Philadelphia all the jurisdiction and powers now vested in the district courts and courts of common pleas, subject to such changes as may be made by this Constitution or by law, shall be in Philadelphia vested in five distinct and separate courts of equal and co-ordinate jurisdiction, composed of three judges each. The said courts in Philadelphia shall be designated respectively as the court of common pleas number one, number two, number three, number four, and number five, but the number of said courts may be by law increased, from time to time, and shall be in like manner designated by successive numbers. In the county of Allegheny all the jurisdiction and powers now vested in the several numbered courts of common pleas shall be vested in one court of common pleas, composed of all the judges in commission in said courts. Such jurisdiction and powers shall extend to all proceedings at law and in equity which shall have been instituted in the several numbered courts, and shall be subject to such changes as may be made by law, and subject to change of venue as provided by law. The president judge of said court shall be selected as provided by law. The number of judges in said court may be by law increased from time to time. This amendment shall take effect on the first day of January succeeding its adoption.

Prodigality.

Andrew Carnegie, at one of his famous dinners in New York, talked about the prodigal and ostentatious expenditures of a certain type of New York millionaire.

"He takes a Velasquez," said Mr. Carnegie, "and cuts it into three strips, so that it will go on a screen. Paul Bourget told the world about that. And I heard, the other day, another thing about him.

"A gentlemen, was being shown over the $3,000,000 palace of one of these millionaires. The gentleman stopped before an enormous mirror and said:

"'What a large and perfect glass! Pity it's scratched!'

"'It is rather a pity,' said the millionaire carelessly; and, turning to his majordomo, he said: 'Don't let the children have any more diamonds to play with, Maurice.'"

Her Superiority.

"Do you think," she asked, "that man has any right to regard himself as woman's superior.

"I should say he hadn't. Why, man would never succeed in getting anywhere if he had to wear shoes consisting of straps over the narrow toes and heels in the middle of the soles."

FOLEY'S ORINO LAXATIVE
FOR STOMACH TROUBLE and CONSTIPATION

Fashion's Fads in Furnishings.

One of the pretty fashions in furnishings this season is to have a single color strongly predominating to a room. One of the most successful of these rooms is done in a series of brown, says the Philadelphia "Times."

The room is a large living room and library; it is finished in chestnut of a rich glowing brown. There are book shelves and a mantle all in the same wood.

The rug is a plain brown drugget, almost exactly repeating the tone of the floor, with a wide border in a lighter shade. The walls are covered with a softened oatmeal paper in brown, a shade lighter than the wood.

The furniture is brown, mission, the severity of which is relieved here and there by wicker chairs in the natural tints. The broad windows have ecru fishnet curtains hanging straight down.

It is a restful room and very pleasant to the eye. What might otherwise become a tiresome monotony of color is relieved by touches of vividly contrasting shades here and there. There are a few bits of brass about, and an autumn landscape in red and browns is one of the few pictures.

Some of the books have red, green or blue bindings, and the cushions for the wicker chair are in green and yellows, while the harmony is completed by a gorgeous bowl of yellow, orange and brown nasturtiums.

Bedrooms with one principal color prevailing are quite easily and cheaply carried out in these days. All the large furnishing stores have wall papers and cretonnes to match. For example, let us suppose the wall paper to be white with blue flowers.

Cretonne may be found exactly matching this in color and design, which will make the curtains for the windows and the covers used in the room. Then it will be possible to buy a cotton rug which will repeat the blues of the walls and draperies, which may also be emphasized by using the same color for chair cushions and other small furnishings.

A Deserter in the Camp.

Burgess F. R. Scofield, of DuBois, announced himself as an independent candidate for State Senate from the Thirty Fourth District composed of Clearfield and Centre counties. Scofield was formerly a Republican and as such has been honored with two elections as a member of the General Assembly. He pretends to be a Republican at this time, but by coming into the field against Joseph Alexander, of Bigler township, the regularly nominated candidate of the Republican party, he lays his Republicanism open to question. The Mountaineer does not regard such action as belonging to any one but a political turncoat. Henceforth let Frederick R. Scofield be known as a deserter from the Republican ranks.—Curwensville Mountaineer.

There was a fine chorus.

A police officer and three assistants came down the stairs quietly.

"Let no one leave this room!" the officer said sternly.

The dramatic pause was succeeded by a babel of confusion.

"Ho, there! Stop him, you!"

It was the vintner who caused this cry, and the agility with which he scrambled through the window into the blind alley was an inspiration.

"After him!" yelled the officer.

But they searched in vain.

"Out into the street, every mother's son of you!" cried the officer. "This is your last warning, Goldberg. The next time you go to prison."

Gretchen alone remained. It was her duty to carry the steins up to the bar. The officer, rather thorough for his kind, studied the floor under the window. He found a cutting from a newspaper. This interested him.

"Do you know who this fellow was?" with a jerk of his head toward the window.

"He is Leopold Dietrich, a vintner, and we are soon to be married."

"What made him run?"

"He is new to Dreiberg. Perhaps he thought you were going to arrest every one."

"Ask him if he is not a spy from Jugendheit," the officer said roughly.

The steins clicked crisply in Gretchen's arms. One of them fell and broke at her feet.

CHAPTER IX.

LOVE'S DOUBTS.

GRETCHEN, troubled in heart and mind over the strange event of the night, walked slowly home.

A footstep from behind caused her to start. The vintner took her roughly in his arms and kissed her many times.

"Gretchen?"

She did not speak.

"What is it?"

"You ask?"

"Was it a crime, then, to jump out of the window?" He laughed.

Gretchen's face grew sterner. "Were you afraid?"

"For a moment. I have never run afoul the police. I thought perhaps we were all to be arrested."

"Perhaps you did not care to have the police ask you questions?"

"What is all this about?" He pulled her toward him so that he could look into her eyes. "What is the matter? Answer."

"Are you not a spy from Jugendheit?" thinly.

He flung aside her hand. "So! The first doubt that enters your ear finds harbor there. A spy from Jugendheit! That is a police suggestion, and you believed it."

"Do you deny it?"

"Yes," proudly, snatching his hat from his head and throwing it violently at her feet—"yes, I deny it. I am not a spy from any country."

"I have asked you many questions," she replied, "but you are always laughing. It is a pleasant way to avoid answering."

The vintner saw himself at bay.

"Gretchen, I have committed no crime. But you must have proof. We will go to the police bureau and settle this doubt."

"When?"

"Now, tonight, while they are hunting for me."

"Forgive me," brokenly.

"I insist. This thing must be righted publicly."

"And I was thinking that the man I loved was a coward!"

"I am braver than you dream, Gretchen." And in truth he was, for he was about to set forth for the lion's den and only amazing cleverness could extricate him. The police bureau was far away, but the distance was nothing to these healthy young people. It was Gretchen who drew back fearfully.

The subchief of the bureau received them with ill concealed surprise.

"I have learned that you are seeking me," said the vintner, taking off his cap.

Immediately the subchief did not know what to say. This was out of the ordinary.

"You are not a native of Dreiberg," he began.

"No, herr; I am from Bavaria. You will find that my papers were presented two or three weeks ago."

The vintner's passports were produced. The subchief compared them to the corresponding number in his book. There was nothing wrong about them.

"What is your business?"

"I am a vintner by trade, herr."

"Why did you jump out of the window?"

"I was frightened at first, herr. I believed that we were all to be arrested."

"You accused him of being a Jugendheit spy," broke in Gretchen.

"I am here because of that accusation," said the vintner.

"What have you to say?"

"I deny it."

"Read this."

It was the cutting. The vintner read it, his brows drawn together in a puzzled frown.

"I can make nothing of this, herr When I cut this out of the paper it was to preserve the notice on the other side." The vintner returned the cutting.

The subchief read aloud:

Vintners and presses and pruners wanted for the season. Find and liberal compensation. Apply Holtz.

Gretchen laughed joyously; the vintner grinned; the subchief swore under his breath.

"The devil fly away with you both!" he cried, making the best of his chagrin. "And when you marry don't invite me to the wedding."

After they had gone, however, he called for an assistant.

"Did you see that young vintner?"

"Yes."

"Follow him night and day. Find out where he lives and what he does and ransack his room if possible. He is either an innocent man or a sleek rascal. Report to me this time each night."

On reaching the street Gretchen gave rein to her laughter. As they turned into the Krumerweg they almost ran into Carmichael.

"Herr Carmichael!" said Gretchen. "And what are you doing here this time of the night?"

"I am looking for a kind of ghost, a specter in black that leaves the palace early in the evening and returns late, whose destination has invariably been 40 Krumerweg."

The vintner started.

"My house?" cried Gretchen.

"Yours? Perhaps you can dispel this phantom?" said Carmichael.

"She was a lady who comes on a charitable errand. But now she will come no more. The object of her visits is gone," Gretchen answered sadly.

"My luck!" ruefully.

"Are you not afraid to walk about in this part of the town so late?" put in the vintner.

"Afraid? Of what? Thieves? Bah, my little man! I carry a sword stick, and, moreover, I know how to use it tolerably well. Good night." And he swung along.

The vintner was not patient tonight.

"Who is this mysterious woman?"

"I am not free to tell you."

"Oh!"

"Leopold, what is the matter with you tonight? You act like a boy."

"I am wrong, Gretchen. You are right. Kiss me."

She liked the tone; she liked the kisses, too, though they hurt.

"Good night, my man!" she whispered.

"Good night, my woman! Tomorrow night at 8."

He turned and ran lightly and swiftly up the street.

From the opposite doorway a mountaineer, a carter, a butcher and a baker stepped cautiously forth.

"He heard something," said the mountaineer. "He has ears like a rat for hearing. What a pretty picture!" cynically. "All the world loves a lover—sometimes. Touching scene!"

No one replied; no one was expected to reply. More than that, no one cared to court the fury which lay thinly disguised in the mountaineer's tones.

"Tomorrow night; you heard what he said. I am growing weary of this play. You will stop him on his way to yonder house. A closed carriage will be at hand. Before he enters, remember. She watches him too long when he leaves. Fool!"

The quartet stole along in the darkness noiselessly and secretly.

The vintner had indeed heard something. He knew not what this noise was, but it was enough to set his heels to flying. His room held a cot, a table and two chairs. Out of the drawer in the table he took several papers and burned them. Ah! A patch of white paper just inside the door caught his eye. He fetched it to the candle. What he read forced the color from his cheeks, and his hands were touched with transient palsy.

"The devil! What shall I do now?" he muttered.

What indeed should he do? Which way should he move? Carmichael, Carmichael! The vintner chuckled softly as he scribbled this note:

If Herr Carmichael would learn the secret of No. 40 Krumerweg, let him attire himself as a vintner and be in the Krumerweg at 8 o'clock tonight.

"So there is a trap, and I am to beware of a mountaineer, a carter, a butcher and a baker? Thanks, Scharsenstein, my friend, thanks! You are watching over me."

* * * * * * *

Colonel von Wallenstein curled his mustaches. It was a happy thought that had taken him into the Aldergasse. This Gretchen had been haunting his dreams, and here she was coming into his very arms, as it were. Gretchen stopped, a cold flurry in her heart.

"Herr, I wish to pass."

"That is possible, Gretchen."

"Will you stand aside?"

"You haunt my dreams."

"That would be a pity."

"I am not going to let you pass till I have had a kiss."

"Ah!" Battle flamed up in Gretchen's eyes.

"Will you let me by peacefully?"

"After the toll—after the toll."

Too late she started to run. He laughed and caught hold of her. With a supreme effort she freed herself and struck him across the face. Quick as a flash she whirled around and ran up the street. The one hope for Gretchen now lay in the Black Eagle, and into the tavern she darted excitedly.

"Frau Bauer," she cried, "may I come behind your counter?"

Wallenstein came in. His hand, held against his stinging cheek, was telltale enough for the proprietress of the Black Eagle.

"Shame!" she cried. "She shall stay here all day," declared Frau Bauer decidedly.

"I can wait." The colonel made for the door. But there was a formidable bulk in the doorway.

"What is going on here, little goose girl?" asked the grizzled old man.

"Herr Colonel insulted me."

"Insulted you!" The colonel laughed boisterously. "Out of the way!" he snarled.

"He tried to kiss me," said Gretchen.

"The man who tries to kiss a woman against her will is always at heart a coward," said the mountaineer.

The colonel seized the old man by the shoulder to push him aside. He put out one of his arms and clasped the colonel in such a manner that he gasped. He was in the clutch of a Carpathian bear.

Proper Diet For Young Children.

After the beginning of the third year meat may be given once every day—scraped beef, beefsteak, lamb-chop (broiled never fried), roast beef and lamb, and the white meat of chicken. Beef and lamb should never be overcooked, rather a trifle rare; chicken however should always be well cooked.

Milk. This must continue the standby. A quart a day is not too much. If not perfectly digested in its unmodified state, it may be prepared in the following way. To six ounces of milk add one ounce of cream and three ounces of water.

Eggs. One soft-broiled, cuddled or poached egg may be given every day, but it is often wiser to give every other day especially before the age of five years. Eggs are a very valuable form of food and it is unfortunate to create in children a dislike for them, and this frequently happens when they are used every day for long periods.

Broths. These are valuable as stimulating foods. They are made more nutritious by the addition of cream or milk and when thickened by arrowroot or corn-starch.

Cereals, always well cooked may be eaten twice a day, morning and evening. Oatmeal, wheat cereals, hominy cornmeal mush, farina, etc., give opportunity for pleasant variation. Cream or rich milk, but little, if any, sugar should be eaten with these.

Candy, in small quantities, of undoubted purity, may sometimes take the place of dessert, or a lump or two of sugar may be allowed at the close of a meal, dinner preferably, even when a simple dessert has been included.—Jeen Williams, M. D., in Woman's Home Companion for September.

The Passing of the Old Hotel.

It ia too bad that the old hotel is so scarce in a way, for there is much comfort and peace to be derived by being around one of them. In your old hotel Mr. Traveler may turn completely around without having to pay five cents. He can put on his hat without giving up a nickel. If he drops his umbrella he does not have to part with a dime to have it recovered. He may scrub his hands in the washroom of the old hotel without having somebody buzzing in his ears, asking if the water is satisfactory and collecting money to hand him the towel, which is on the shelf in front of him. He may part his hair, if he has any, without paying demurrage. He may smoke, write a letter, go where he pleases and be glad that life is not all marble slabs and gilt bellboys. It is such a fine thing to have an old hotel.—Simeon Ford in Leslie's.

REAPING BENEFIT

From the Experience of Bellefonte People.

We are fortunate indeed to be able to profit by the experience of our neighbors. The public utterance of Bellefonte residents on the following subject will interest and benefit thousands of our readers. Read this statement. No better proof can be had.

Mrs. L. Ingram, 382 E. Pishop St., Bellefonte, Pa., says: "Doan's Kidney Pills have done me a world of good and I feel that I cannot speak too highly of them. I suffered intensely from backache and my kidneys gave me a great deal of annoyance. Nothing helped me until I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Green's Pharmacy Co. In return for the improvement they made I publicly recommended them in October, 1907, and at this time I can say that I have had no further trouble from my kidneys. You are at liberty to use my name as one who recommends Doan's Kidney Pills highly from personal experience.

Afraid of Being Victimized

Edward H. R. Green, the son of the richest woman in the world, is a bachelor.

"The reason why I am a bachelor," said Mr. Green to a St. Louis reporter, "is that I'm so big that I can't disguise myself sufficiently to pose as a poor man. In my own person I'm afraid of being married for the wrong reason.

"I'm afraid lest, like the lady with the doughnuts, I may be the victim of ulterior and insulting motives.

"The lady I refer to, after assisting a tramp, received another visit an hour later from the same man.

"Madam, he said, you gave me three doughnuts a while back. Would you mind adding another one to make it four?'

"Gladly,' said the lady, all smiles, and she wrapped a doughnut in a newspaper and handed it to him. So you like my doughnuts, do you?'

"No, madam, it isn't that,' said the tramp: 'me and some friends down in the holler wants to have a game of quoits.''

In Time of Trouble.

Representative Dudley M. Hughes of the Third Georgia District, is a farmer in addition to being a statesman. Recently when he was at home, Mr. Hughes received an urgent call to go to the Police Station in Macon. When he arrived Mr. Hughes found that one of his colored laborers had temporary quarters there, says the Saturday Evening Post.

The negro was very penitent and very anxious to get out.

"Marse Dud," he said, "youse er deekin in de White Baptis' Church, ain't yer?'

"Yes, Sam."

"An' yer knows I's er deekin de Cullud Baptis' Church, don't yer, Marse Dud?"

"Yes, Sam; but what has this to do with your present trouble?"

"Well, I jis' wanter say dis, Marse Dud, dat hit's time fer us deekins t' stick together!"

Waddle, famous for his witty sayings and originator of the expression: "We come into the world crying and there is crying when we go out," called at "The Republican" office with a two-fold mission on Tuesday. In the first place, he wanted to advance his subscription another year, and in the second place, he said, he wanted to inquire, confidentially, whether the base ball season had really closed.

The Garman boys, that is, all except Corn, were in Bellefonte over Sunday and enjoyed one of the little reunions which they make such a delightful part of their lives. Mr. and Mrs. Ira D. Garman came up from Philadelphia for a few days with old friends, while Robert T. and Allen S. came down from Tyrone. In addition to being one of the most progressive and successful jewelers in Philadelphia, Ira Garman is president of the State Jewelers Association, an honor of which Bellefonte has every reason to be proud, for he is an old Bellefonte boy and one of the class who reflect credit on his home town. Before returning to Philadelphia he called at "The Republican" office and advanced his subscription another year. Ira, or "Dick" as he is best known, is one of of our regular readers and the fact that he keeps fully posted on Centre County news shows that he never loses his interest in home friends and home events.

The Central Railroad Company this week put into service a caboose which for color has everything within fourteen miles faded into a shadow. Its a good thing for the caboose that it is intended to travel up and down through the Nittany valley, for if it should jump the track and break into a parade of Irishmen some St. Patrick's Day there is no telling just what would happen. The color of the caboose, instead of being the regulation red, is a light orange and is about the gayest thing in railroad circles this side of Oshkosh.

Miss Ruth Brown and her sister, Miss Sarah, of Freeburg, Pa., arrived in Bellefonte on Monday evening and are at the home of Rev. and Mrs. C. W. Winey Miss Ruth Brown will resume her duties as milliner for Joseph Bros., while her sister will visit at the Winey home for several weeks.

Considering the threatening weather, an exceptionally large crowd attended the annual picnic of the Odd Fellows of State College and Bellefonte, at Hunter's Park, on Labor Day. There were numerous contests and field sports and a most delightful time was enjoyed by all present.

Cyrus W. Hunter, whose Republicanism is as deep and everlasting as the hospitality of all the people of Stormstown, spent several days in town last week and of course, visited "The Republican" office. Cyrus says that Stormstown will "do itself proud" for the Republican ticket in November. That's a safe bet.

Rev. J. S. Fulton, of Johnstown, will preach both morning and evening, on Sunday, next, at the United Brethren church. The regular "Free Will" offering will be lifted. The offering is collected to aid in liquidating the parsonage debt, which amounts to considerable. The public are cordially invited to attend both services.

Jacob A. Grove, one of our valued subscribers at Tyrone, gladdened our heart a few days ago with a kindly letter and an enclosure which enables us to advance his subscription to "The Republican" another year. Our hope is that each week's paper will not only interest him but meet his desire to get all the news from old Centre County.

One of our most genial callers for some time was J. M. Brower, of Benner township, who dropped in for a little chat. Mr. Brower is one of the "boys in blue," and he is proud of the uniform he wears, just as his friends are proud of his services for the Union in the troublous and trying days of the Civil War.

On Tuesday persons passing Harry Alters' store, next door to Archie Allison's, might have thought a chemical factory had upset, judging by the pronounced odor in that vicinity. It seems that a three-gallon jug of gasoline, which had just been refilled, broke as it was being taken into the Alters store, flooding the sidewalk and giving it the best cleaning it has had in many a day. Harry said he didn't mind the odor so much, but that gasoline is pretty high to receive such liberal applications.

Jolly Ira Longwell, the man who pleases so many housekeepers with his choice cuts of meat, delivered at their door, was a caller at "The Republican" office a few days ago. He was so busy that he only remained long enough to hand us a one dollar bill to advance his subscription anothe year. He laughingly told us to "just hang the receipt on any old hook and he would get it some day." The receipt is "on the hook," but Ira is so busy selling meat that he, no doubt, has not found time to call for it.

Elmer Showers, whose home is at Buffalo, N. Y., and who had been visiting old Bellefonte friends for a week or two, departed for home last week. Wanting a good Republican newspaper and also a good Centre County newspaper, Mr. Showers called at "The Republican" office and become enrolled as a subscriber. We will guarentee that after he has read the "The Republican" for one year he will never dispute our Republicanism and that he will be convinced of his wisdom in selecting this newspaper in order to get all the Centre County news.

On looking over some correspondence a day or two ago we happened to come across a letter which made us feel that we had perhaps appeared ungrateful to an old-time friend and subscriber of "The Republican." The letter in question was from E. S. Long, of Wingate, directing that his subscription be advanced and saying some very nice things about "The Republican." It was due to one of those oversights which will happen in a busy office that we neglected to acknowledge Mr. Long's kind letter, and while it may seem rather late we would rather be late than have such a good friend of this paper feel that his interest in us is not appreciated. It is deeply appreciated and we want to say to Mr. Long that the next time he writes to us he may rest assured his letter will not be misled and go without proper acknowledgement.

Sidney A. Foster, Secretary.

My dear Foster:--Yours of the 16th inst., stating that my policy, No. 407, for $2000, is now fully paid and giving me the options on same, received and noted. I must say that the statement you sent far exceeds anything I had hoped for, judging from other old life companies. The cash valuation of this policy is more than any other old line company in the East pays, and the paid-up insurance is much in excess of anything they do.

I congratulate your company, and you as one of its principal managers, on the success you have attained, and know that the showing you make in this letter to me as to my policy would induce any young man to enter this company in preference to any other.

I have decided to accept the total cash value of $2120.86, and herein enclose you my policy which I surrender you for said sum.

Yours very truly,
Signed A. T. FLICKINGER.
